FB meets Facebook's XB video app for Xbox One brings its original content, live stream, and suggested content to your console. 21 Mar 2018 Just in case you couldn't find enough of Facebook's video content on your phone or PC, the company is now making a command for your attention on your Xbox too. Facebook's video is now available for Xbox One, serving up a constant feed of videos your friends are sharing as well as Facebook's own video content. Setting the app up is pretty simple: Once you've downloaded and opened it, Facebook Videos asks you to open the Facebook app on your phone and give it signed permission to your account via an in-app notification. Once you're signed in, you'll default to a feed of videos that your friends have liked or recommended. You can also quickly choose from live stream, suggested video, your own video, and facebook's own original display on the left navigation bar. And for gamers, there's a dedicated section to catch videos and live streams for games that you follow. Xbox One is the latest platform to catch Facebook's attention since the company first started rolling out its dedicated video app for Samsung TV, Apple TV, and other platforms in 2017. The move comes as the company is turning its attention towards competing with YouTube and Twitch for baseball in the online video space. If you're curious, you can pick up Facebook Videos from the Microsoft Store on Xbox One right now. See the Microsoft Store We can earn a commission to purchase using our links. learn more. On Facebook's day-two FB keynote, Joaquin Quiñero Candela, one of the company's honchos AI, just provided an update on the technologies the company is developing to analyze video. The company is able to not only identify several people at a clip, but also what they're doing: sitting, standing, walking, monitoring. It's also working hard to push AI on the phone rather than rely on servers in the cloud. One project involves analyzing 2D videos – most phones only have one lenses on each side - and 3D space display from a flat image. This is useful for effects like real video videos that make you look drip, but pleasantly drift the background. This story originally appeared on the Buffer Facebook News Feed designed to be the best, the most important content from the people and pages you're closest to. Though this content was posted a few hours ago. This approach is not a great fit with live video, though. It doesn't matter if a video was broadcast live if you missed it and had to catch a reputation. For this Facebook controller made some updates of the way News works when it comes to showing live video content. Facebook wants to draw attention to live video broadcasts at-the-moment, and the data appears to show that Live Content will keep users careful for longer. In a blog post, Facebook shared that people spend more than 3x more time a Facebook Live video on average compared to other video content. In this post, we will dive into how Facebook Live videos work and also take a look at what it means for the Facebook News Feed.Ki what does Facebook Live videos? Live video allows you to share what you're seeing in real time – if you're visiting a new location, cooking your favorite recipes, or just want to share some thoughts. Wherever you are, Live allows you to bring your friends, family, and followers, right next to you to experience what happens together. Facebook launched Live for Celebrities in August 2015 and gradually started rolling it out to influencers and audit profiles before eventually opening it up to all iOS users in January 2016. Android support followed in February.How to use LiveTo share video, tap on Update Status and then select the Live Video icon. If you'd like, you can write a quick description and select the audience that you want to share with before you go live. Rather than notify all your friends or fans when you broadcast, Facebook will only send a push notification to close friends, people who recently interact with your page, or those who have subscribed to your Live video. During your broadcast, you will see the number of viewers, the names of friends who are mixing in with a real-time stream of comments. Streaming can be no longer 30 minutes, and when you finish your streaming, it will be saved on your timeline like any other video. Mark Zuckerberg has used a great defender of Life and sees it as a way for people to have an authentic and innermost experience sharing about their lives. How Will This Affect The News Feed? Facebook News Feed's is constantly eunuch as Facebook discovers that signaling helps to display the most relevant content of each user. When people first started watching and sharing videos, Facebook listened to user feedback to discover which signals they should follow in order to show more people in unwanted videos and less of video by. At first, the updated News Food Ranking takes into account how many people have watched a video and how long people will look for. Over time, Facebook learned that certain people's actions take on a video, such as choosing to turn on sound or making the full video screen, are good signs they wanted to see that video, even if they didn't decide like it. Since the Live feature has rolled out more users, Facebook Live videos have become increasingly popular with more people, and the pages are creating and watching videos in real time. With Live's popularity in mind, Facebook has decided to start treating different Live videos in the News Feed, as explained in latest blog post: This News Feed update should mean people are more likely to see Facebook Live streams while still in progress-. This provides a much more engaged experience as volatile may comment and interact with the in-moment broadcast. For an always up-to-date list of Feed News factors and check out Facebook News Feed.3 Quick-Fire Live videos best practice1. Building anticipation Lift your fans and followers to know when you will Live is a good way to build interests and excitement ahead of your streaming.2. Writing a convincing title before you start broadcasting TIt convincing can go a long way in convincing people to tune in to your broadcast. The following example of Mark Zuckerberg is a major. Ask fans to comment for a question providing a clear CTA and a reason to tune in:3. Ask the subscription technologies some point to your broadcast, draw users carefully on the subscription button in the right-hand corner of your video. If someone types this, they will be advised when you kick-off any broadcasts in the future. More than you Live video is an incredible opportunity to connect with your audience. With its priorities in the News Feed, it could be a major means to break through the noise and grab attention. Live video is now available to people with selected pages, and it's being rolled out to everyone soon. Now could be a great time to start thinking about how you can get the most out of Facebook Live. maybe take fans backstage at your company and showing them behind the scenes, a Q&#amp;t;g. A session or even product demo accompanied launch. A few possibilities for live video content could take fans of your company and showing them behind the scenes; Q&#amp;t;g. A session or even demo is produced to accompany launch. Facebook (NASDAQ:FB) seems to be following in on CEO Mark Zuckerberg's promise that the world's largest social media site will focus on mobile by creating a slew of growth apps rather than attempting to fit all Facebook's mobile functions inside the main Facebook app. We also have a few separate apps that are widely used, such as Instagram and Messenger, saying our mesaging app stands out, he said after the company's third-quarter earnings call, per The Vege. In the future, we expect to develop more of these services to help people share. Standalone Facebook apps like Instagram and Messenger have been very successful, as users clearly apps that perform a single function and do it well rather than apps that try to pack too much into one space. Zuckerberg has gotten the message, and he's trying to make sure the site keeps creating more apps that its users will find useful to proceed with its vision of users turning to Facebook for everything in our digital lives. Now, according to various reports, it appears as though Facebook is getting very closely introducing a Flipboard-style news app that will provide users with news stories and current events and allow them to discuss articles with their Facebook friends. Early this week, Facebook announced that it had acquired link-sharing services Branch and Potluck, and the teams that worked on these apps would become part of the new Facebook Conversations team. Meanwhile, Re/Code reported on Tuesday Facebook will unveil its rumored Paper app again, after a series of fake starts with the news reading app last year. Re/code reporting that the social network has worked with the team behind the New Year Feed for years rolling out a product that would act as an agregator of relevant media content and provide a mix of news stories along with status updates. But according to the verge, the real money and success for Facebook will lay off separate news content from friends updates, so that users can select it one or the other. A Paper app might be more useful not functioning as a way to separate these two very different types of content. Conversations might be combined with Paper to Facebook users a way to discuss current events among themselves outside of the regular Facebook News Facebook. A huge advantage for such an action. Facebook's current stand-alone account was very successtful – the photo-sharing user engagement Instagram user is creeping almost towards Facebook and Messenger is the most widely used messaging app in the US. Though there were some shortages (the Poker app), Facebook has proven that approving its engineering talent and its giant user base can result in successful stand-alone apps. Now Facebook may soon become the place you go from for news about the world as well as news about your friends and family.
